Beans for climate resilience, food security and better nutrition

Explore the role of research in strengthening the (vital role of) beans diversity in enhancing food security and nutrition, promoting environmental sustainability. Discover how diverse improved varieties of beans and their unique traits help farmers to adapt to different climates, or address malnutrition challenges across the world such as micronutrient deficiencies.

Scaling Up Rice Sustainability in Latin America

FLAR, a public-private partnership hosted by the Alliance of Bioversity & CIAT, has united 30 organizations across 17 countries for over 30 years to advance sustainable rice production. With 109 rice varieties released in 15 countries, FLAR addresses key challenges such as productivity, grain quality, and stress tolerance. Its agronomy program has successfully scaled up sustainable practices alongside improved rice varieties. This collaborative model offers valuable insights for other regions and crop systems.
